Sherborne Developmental Movement
Edited by Elizabeth Marsden & Jo Egerton
With a foreword by Melanie Peter

Veronica Sherborne developed a unique way of engaging children and young people with severe learning difficulties in interactive learning which became known as Sherborne Developmental Movement, described in her book, Developmental Movement for Children (Worth Publishing 2001). In its conception, she drew on her knowledge of child development, her intense interest in human movement and its psychological implications. Although Sherborne Developmental Movement has its roots in education, current practitioners come from diverse professions, including physiotherapy, occupational therapy and speech and language therapy, as well as education.

The recent publication of Cyndi Hill's book, Communication through Movement (Sunfield Publications, 2006) has provoked a quest for further exploration into the potential benefits of Sherborne Developmental Movement as an interactive approach. Moving with Research aims to confirm, encourage and, we hope, inspire both new and experienced practitioners to take a proactive role in testing out Veronica Sherborne's claims.

Moving with Research presents research which has been carried out in both the UK and Europe by educationalists, therapists and health professionals. The impetus for producing this book has arisen from the current high demands for evidence-based practice, and the need of head teachers, therapists, funding bodies and local authorities for evidence of the efficacy of the Sherborne Developmental Movement (SDM) programme and its beneficial and worthwhile effects.
